You, Your Child and the School... How to Positively Manage the Crisis we are Living at Home

Thursday, March 4, 2021 • 7:00-8: 30 p.m.

Presented in Spanish

Psychologist Dr. Ferney Ramírez coordinates programs for families in Chicago and various Illinois school districts and is the author of ten mental health publications. He is President of the Family First Organization, and has extensive experience in clinical psychology, couples therapy, and family counseling inside and outside of the United States. He obtained advanced degrees in Philosophy, Clinical Psychology, and Occupational Health in Colombia and was a professor at the Faculties of Psychology and Education, San Buenaventura University, Colombia.

Confinement, not returning to school, and hearing negative news regarding the current situation has led many children and adolescents to generate certain emotional conflicts that must be dealt with in a timely and effective manner before they become more complex problems. Receiving a remote education can lead children to lose interest in going to school, and today more than ever, parents must be in contact with teachers to be aware of their children's school performance. In this workshop, Dr. Ferney Ramírez will share some strategies to work on the motivation of students so that their academics continue to be a top priority.
